Index To The 1852 Map Of Jefferson County

A copy of the 1852 map of Jefferson County by S. Howell Brown hangs in the County Clerk's office, while a number of other copies survive in private hands throughout the county. The map and its maker are described in Miss Linnie Schley's article, Samuel Howell Brown, The Man and His Maps (Magazine of the Jefferson County Historical Society, Vol. XXXI, December, 1965, pp. 13-19.)

As many hundreds of farmowners' names appear on the map, it is not always easy to locate a specific name or property, and would be almost impossible to determine certainly that a name does not appear. An index to the map seems obviously useful to owners or users of the map.

It appears, moreover, that such an index has some interest and usefulness, quite apart from the map itself. It provides what must be an almost complete list of rural landowners in Jefferson County in 1852. Scattered through the index is the interesting list of some fifty farms which boasted names in 1852. The number of grist mills and sawmills is intriguing. The index, in short, suggests numerous topics for further research into the history of the county.

Indexing is made possible by the fact that the original map is divided into twenty-seven districts. Miss Schley mentions this fact in her article (p. 15) and also quotes from notes at the side of the map that there were 27 public schools in the County (p. 16). John Y. McDonald points out in his article, John Yates and Jefferson's Many Schools—Their Evolution (Magazine of the Jefferson County Historical Society, Vol. XXXVII, December, 1971, p. 43) that Howell Brown mapped the school districts in 1852. Thus we find a school located on the map near the center of each of the rural districts; the scale of the map is such that individual homeowners, and buildings such as schools, can not be shown in the small districts in Charles Town, Harpers Ferry, and Shepherdstown.

It is worth noting in connection with Jefferson County schools of this period that the system comprised "free schools for the education of all classes." The system was much more advanced than those in the neighboring counties of Frederick, Clarke, and Berkeley, where the public schools were "merely poor-law schools to provide elementary education for all white children whose parents could not pay for their schooling." (Edward H. Phillips, The Lower Shenandoah Valley During the Civil War. The Impact of War upon the Civilian Population and Upon Civil Institutions. p. 221. Unpublished doctoral thesis, University of North Carolina, 1958. Copy in the possession of Mrs. John A. Willis, Jr., Beckley, W.Va.)

In using the index, the reader should note the following conventions used in its preparation. For examples:

1. "Adams . . . 2" means that there is a property located entirely in School District 2 marked as owned by Adams.

2. "Alexander, Dr. William F. . . . 18-20" means that there is a property located partly in School District 18, and to a smaller extent in School District 20, therefore along the border between the two districts, that is marked as owned by Dr. William F. Alexander.

3. "Aldridge, Andrew . . . 9, 19" means that there are two properties marked as owned by Andrew Aldridge, one entirely in School District 9, and the other located entirely in School District 19.

4. "Allen, William F. . . . C-12" means that there is a property located on the border between Clarke County and School District 12 of Jefferson County marked as owned by William F. Allen. "B" is used for Berkeley County, and "L" for Loudoun County. While the index includes all properties along the county borders which extend into Jefferson County, it omits a few properties on the map which lie entirely in Berkeley or Clarke, and do not extend into Jefferson at all.

The identifying family names given in the index to many schools, sawmills, and gristmills are arbitrarily assigned in indexing, from the name of the landowner on whose property the feature appears to lie. They are not the names by which the schools or mills were known in most cases, but merely serve to identify the propertyowner on whose land the place may be found on the map.

Only a small number of rivers, runs, roads, and railroads are named by Howell Brown on his map. These have been included in the index, but many roads and streams are drawn but not named on the map, and are not indexed.
